

MEMORY JOGGER

As you begin building your list, it's important to think of everyone you know without prejudging or prequalifying. Don't worry if you've forgotten their last name or don't remember their phone number. Simply write down as much information as you can. Later, you can go back and fill in the missing information as you build your list.

For now, we've formulated some questions and a list of possible occupations to help jog your memory:

Who is the most successful person you know?

Who was your best friend in high school?

Who was your best friend in college?

Who was in your wedding party?

Who is your best friend now?

Who is your best friend at work?

Who do you play sports or recreational activities with?

Who is your neighbor?

Who is your brother, sister, brother-in-law, sister-in-law?

Who are your cousins?

Who are your children's friends' parents?

Who do you know from the PTA?

Who do you know from church?

Who is your doctor?

Who do you know from your local coffee shop?

Who do you know from your gym?

Who do you know that is discontent with their occupation, profession or business?

Who is the realtor who sold you your house?

Who do you know that's always looking to get ahead in life?

Who are your friends on social media?
